DIRECTIONS: Have the child read the passage for one minute. Record errors and number of words read. If a child pauses for more than three seconds on a word, give them the word and count it as an error.

Letitia had the best bike in the entire school. It had purple, pink, and blue glittery swirls and white tires. Letitia could do jumps and tricks almost as well as anyone.

One afternoon, Letitia came out of school to find her bike lock lying broken in the dirt. The bike was gone. Immediately, she ran to find Einstein, the smartest, and the shortest, kid in school.

Einstein followed Letitia to the scene of the crime. "Well, it's clear that the thief wasn't strong enough to cut through the lock in one stroke. Maybe a kid."

He examined the ground around the bike rack. "The thief rode the bike away—you can see the footprints stop. So it must be someone about your size."

Einstein gasped. "The thief rode it on only one wheel. So it must be someone who can do wheelies!" Suddenly, they spotted none other but Chet Wilson doing a wheelie on Letitia's bike. Chet was the only person who could do better wheelies than Letitia.

"Chet!" Letitia shouted, and Chet froze, dropping the bike. "Why would you take my bike?"

Chet looked embarrassed. "Well, you were so good at tricks, I figured it might be your bike. I didn't want you to get better than me, so I took it. I didn't want to look ridiculous."

"Well, Chet, you failed at not looking ridiculous. After all, you're doing wheelies on a girl's bike," Einstein said, smiling.
